

Deafblindness is in the opposite way of the human development!

Alex Garcia

I have observed some texts and reflections which deal with human development. They are good texts if we just consider the theory, but they don't reach the key point to practice understanding. Therefore, I've decided to "scribble" this brief orientation because in my classes it's necessary to get faster to the basis for practical intervention. At this time, I highlight deafblindness, however, it serves everyone.

In my classes, there are some questions I leave to deal directly with the student because it is essential that he/she can reflect individually.

One of these aspects is extremely important and it regards to human development.

I see like this: "Deafblindness is in the opposite way to human development".

For this reason, But how does human development happen? Deafblindness becomes extremely complex. It happens as follows:

"Understanding precedes execution".

All human beings must understand so they can execute. When we highlight that "understanding precedes executing" we are in fact highlighting the receptive communication (understanding).

And the expressive communication (execution). And it is in the receptive communication "the essence" that the "opposite way" aspect is.

If a Deafblind Person does not understand, through his/her "different" communication models, this person won't execute anything correctly.
